He wanted to see the boy's talent in person, so he called the boy to the palace. When the boy arrived at the great hall, the King agreed to make a deal with him. The King said, "If you can answer my three questions, I'll look on you as my own child. What's more, you'll live with me in the palace."

The boy asked, "What are the three questions?" So, the King said, "How many drops of water are in the ocean?" "I'll tell you," the boy answered. "However, you must dam all the rivers on Earth and wait until I count each drop." Then the King asked, "How many stars are in the sky?" After that, the boy started to draw fine dots on a great sheet of paper. When he finished, he said, "There are as many stars in the sky as there are dots on the paper."

Finally, the King asked, "How many seconds are there in eternity?" The boy said, "The Diamond Mountain is two and a half miles high, wide, and deep. "He continued, "Every 100 years, a special bird comes and sharpens its beak on it. When it makes the whole mountain disappear, the first second of eternity will be over."

"You answered my questions like a wise man," the King said. "So, from now on, you'll live here with me, and I'll look on you as my own child."

Alice: Hi, Dora. Have you ever joined a hash run? I've never heard of it.

Dora: Yes. In fact, I am one of the club members.

Alice: What is it?

Dora: In 1938, some British men in Kuala Lumpur(吉隆坡) started running club. They named it the Hash House Harriers. They based their run on a British public school racing game-hare and hounds. In it, a hare sets a path, and the hounds run after it and try to catch it.

Alice: How interesting! How does it go?

Dora: At first, we're giving the rabbit time to set the path for us to follow.

Alice: An animal sets the path?

Dora: No, the rabbit is the front runner. He or she goes first and sets the path with flour, paper, or other things.

Alice: That sounds great.

Dora: A "hash run" is like a fun group adventure. People follow a path outdoors. There's some running or walking, and you might find surprises or challenges along the way.

Alice: Cool! I've never run through a forest or a field before.

Dora: That's the fun of hashing. We'll get to run through different kinds of land. The runs are 8 to 10 kilometers long. At the end, everyone hangs out, share stories, and enjoys food and drinks together. It's very popular, and there are clubs all over the world.

Alice: No wonder you like it so much. You are really a big fan of it.
