TBC News Work and Travel Around the World

A digital nomad is someone who works on a computer while traveling. With fast internet and Wi-Fi, they can do their jobs from anywhere, like a café, hotel, or beach. Jobs like writing, graphic design or marketing are ideal for digital nomads.

This kind of lifestyle grew in the 2010s when many young people wanted to leave office jobs and travel. After COVID-19, more people found they could work from anywhere, even after lockdowns ended.

Today, more than 35 million people call themselves digital nomads. Some countries, like Spain and Greece, give special visas to welcome them. However, some local people are not happy because digital nomads make living costs higher. In places like Bali and South Africa, locals feel like they are being pushed out of their own towns.

Some digital nomads try to help the places they visit by supporting local shops and following local customs. For example, ROORAL helps them find jobs in small towns, so they can give back to the community but not only take from it. While being a digital nomad is fun, it's important to respect the places they go and make sure their actions don't hurt the communities they visit.

Picture you are on vacation and looking for a nice meal. You are surprised when you have to pay NT$300 for a small plate of food. This has happened to many visitors at Kenting Beach in Taiwan.

In the 1980s, Kenting was quiet with few visitors. Later, it became Taiwan's first national park. By the mid-2000s, many Taiwanese tourists loved visiting Kenting. The movie Cape No. 7 was filmed there in 2008. It made Kenting even more popular for its clean beaches, seafood, and music festivals.

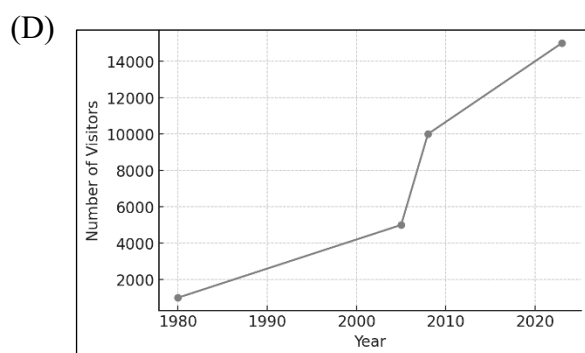

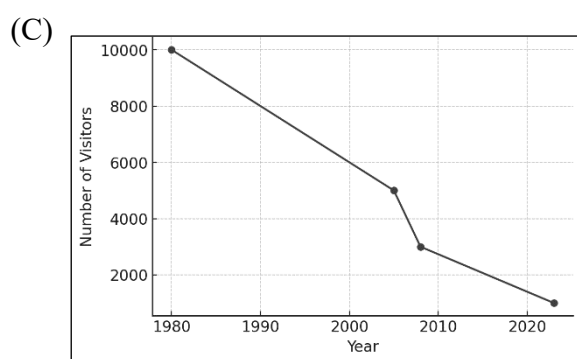

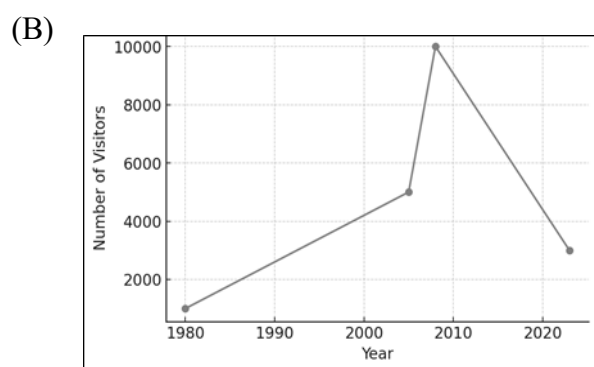

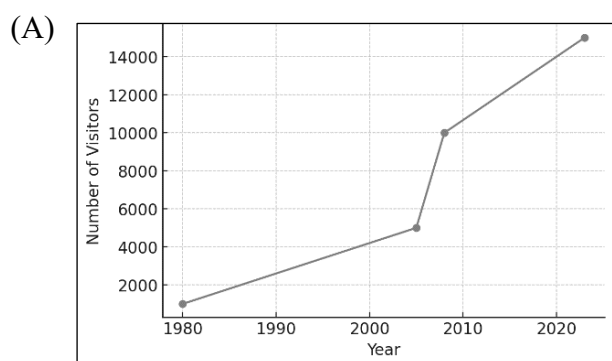

Over the last 10 years, the number of visitors has dropped by 70%. There are four main reasons for this drop-off. First, businesses raised their prices, but the quality of food and services did not get better. Second, cheap airlines made it easier for people to travel to Japan and Korea. These places had lower prices. Third, a big earthquake in 2024 hit Hualien. People became worried about safety. This caused fewer visitors to come to Taiwan, including Kenting. Finally, fewer Chinese tourists visited after the Chinese government stopped people from traveling to Taiwan.

Kenting is facing many problems, but it could become popular again. The government and local businesses need to work together to solve the problem and make sure visitors get good value for their money. Then, Kenting could become popular again!
